Course description

As the recent "refugee crisis" illustrates once again, the impact of immigration on host societies' political, social and economic systems often leads to politically controversial discussions in both politics and media. The same also applies to the academic debate, where the impact of immigration is discussed in a wide area of sub-disciplines including political science, sociology, social-psychology and economics. The seminar offers an introduction into these debates and their dominant theories, including issues like the impact of immigration on social trust, attitudes towards migrants, the electoral success of Extreme Right Parties, and the welfare state. Critically examining empirical findings and discussing diverging theories and methodological approaches, the seminar focus on international-comparative and mainly quantitative studies.

Prerequisites

The focus of the seminar literature will be on empirical studies which mainly follow a quantitative research design. Therefore, a general understanding of this kind of methodology is highly recommended. Since nearly all reading assignments are in English, this will be the general classroom language as well. Participants therefore must know enough English to be able to participate actively. Perfection is not required – you just need to understand and make yourself understood.

Registration

Students have to register via KLIPS.

Reading assignments

At the beginning of April, the required texts for the sessions of the seminar can be accessed via ILIAS. If you register via KLIPS you automatically have access to the ILIAS files.

Working requirements and assessment method

All participants are expected to:

- complete assigned obligatory readings according to schedule
- actively contribute to class discussions
- give a 10-minutes presentation on one of the "further literature" texts
- write a research paper

Submission of the research paper

The research paper has to be handed in an electronic version via email to spies@wiso.uni-koeln.de.
